Collaborative Professional Learning to Support Vermont Schools

Focus on Teaching – Using Video to Improve Professional Learning

A 2-day Institute with Jim Knight

November 6 & 7, 2017

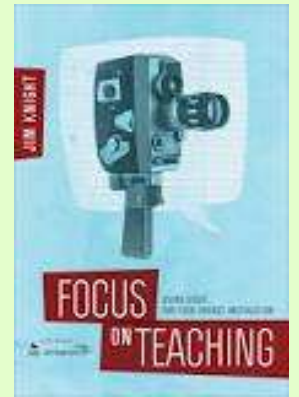

Target Audience: Intensive professional development for teachers, coaches, teams, and administrators

This institute is designed to provide participants with an intensive learning experience so that they are ready to support the use of video in a variety of forms of professional development. To accomplish this, participants will learn the institute content through a combination of explanation by the presenter, small and large group discussion, practice, and planning.

Participants will:

- identify their own beliefs about watching themselves on video, and how to decrease the fears that others may have about video recording themselves.
- learn principles and practices that honor the professionalism of teachers and that lead to meaningful improvements for children.
- learn about strategies and principles of action that foster the creation of psychologically safe environments for meaningful use of video.
- hear suggestions on how to address practical concerns such as what kind of camera to use, where to point the camera, and why everyone should have a choice about whether or not they will record themselves.
- learn procedures teachers, coaches, teams, and administrators can employ to use video effectively.
- leave the session with many free tools that can be used with video to foster deeper professional learning.

More information about our presenter and specific content covered is available on our website.
