Collaborative Professional Learning to Support Vermont Schools

Jim Knight – Designing High Impact Professional Development for High Impact Instruction

a 2-day Institute tailored for Vermont
November 7 & 8, 2018

Target Audience: Instructional Coaches, Principals, Professional Developers, Curriculum Directors and other educational leaders

This two-day institute will take your leadership skillset to the next level. The teachers and faculty in schools that make a difference have meaningful dialogue, exciting professional learning opportunities and leaders who are connected to the school community. How can your presentations or teacher workshops inspire and deliver a powerful message? How can your work with teachers show them how to increase student engagement so that you have a high impact school?

Day 1: How to Create High Impact Presentations and Workshops

- Use effective design to develop your presentation
- Designing slide decks (Jim worked with the woman who created Al Gore's slide deck for a presentation that led to the Nobel Peace Prize.)
- Apply the learning to real life
- Powerfully deliver your message
- Connect with and read your audience and adapt!
- Keep the energy high throughout.
- Telling stories to bring the learning home.

Day 2: Engagement: What is it? Why is it important? How can we foster it?

Research is quite clear that when students are not engaged, they are more likely to drop out. Engagement is an equity issue. Whether teaching students, adults or each other, engagement matters.

- Why engagement is important for healthy relationships, happiness, and success
- What engagement is, and the difference between behavioral engagement, cognitive engagement, and affective engagement
- How different approaches to engagement can be measured through time on task, experience sampling, and student qualitative responses
- How positive relationships, thinking prompts, effective questions, cooperative learning, quality assignments, stories, and experiential learning can be used to increase engagement
- How the impact cycle can be used to help teachers set goals and implement teaching strategies that increase engagement
