Collaborative Professional Learning to Support Vermont Schools

Disrupting Poverty: Turning High-Poverty Schools into High-Performing Schools

Facilitator: Kathleen M. Budge Co-author and Associate Professor at Boise State University

Target Audience: K-12 Educators and Equity Leaders

We know the transformative power of educators, particularly teachers, to improve the life chances of children and youth who live in poverty. What sets these educators apart from others is not only attending to what and how they teach, but also to who they are (what they believe and value) and why they became educators in the first place.

In this 2-day institute, Dr. Budge will share practical advice from her best-selling ASCD books: Disrupting Poverty: Five Powerful Classroom Practices and her latest book (included with this institute) Turning High-Poverty Schools into High-Performing Schools. Participants will learn:

- The five practices that foster a supportive classroom culture and build resilience
- New data and insights into strategies for developing collective efficacy that support high poverty schools
- Integrating social-emotional learning into schoolwide processes and classroom practices
- Supporting children who have experienced trauma.

They will leave equipped with tools and a road map for disrupting poverty's adverse influence not only on academic learning, but on social and emotional learning as well.

Paul Gorski, founder of EdChange states, "Budge and Parrett are two of my go-to people on poverty and education and they ought to be two of your go-to people, too!"
