Collaborative Professional Learning to Support Vermont Schools

Standards-Based Learning: Structures, Systems, and Strategies for Transformation

Facilitated by: Emily Rinkema and Stan Williams

Target Audience: Grades 5-12 Classroom Teachers, Special Educators, Administrators, Instructional Coaches, and other Educational Leaders

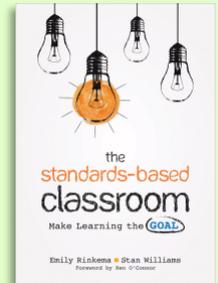

All schools in Vermont are currently grappling with what it means to be proficiency-based. One of the great things about our state's approach to this progression is the autonomy our schools have to define learning in the context of their communities while staying true to the central tenets of Standards-Based Learning (SBL). Whether just beginning the transition, or a few years in, schools and teachers are quickly realizing that SBL is much more than how we grade, report about, and graduate our students. While these elements are essential, the true power of SBL comes in transforming what learning looks like in our classrooms and schools.

In this two-day institute participants will explore the practices related to curriculum, instruction, and assessment that are essential to make learning the goal for every student in a standards-based classroom. They will leave with systems, structures, and strategies to adapt and implement within their unique school and classroom settings. Each day will consist of a balance of multiple structures including Full Group Time, Breakout Time and Team Time if you come with a team. Participants will set goals early in the institute that will guide their learning and doing throughout the two days.
